

Religion & Teaching Resources

Season Four

As we begin the fourth season of “Religion &”, we continue to find questions about religion and American culture at the center of public conversations as we simultaneously face increasing polarization that threatens the possibility and promise of healthy discourse. The Center for the Study of Religion and American Culture is uniquely positioned to facilitate discussions on the relationship between these cultural shifts, the study of religion, and the role of the modern scholar and teacher. For over 30 years, CSR&AC has brought together scholars and practitioners to engage religion and its relationship to the most important questions in our fields, on our campuses, and throughout our society. “Religion &” is a series of monthly conversations between leading academics, activists and public thinkers hosted by the Center for the Study of Religion and American Culture to continue these critically important interventions.

Every month via Zoom and Facebook, emerging scholars alongside established thinkers will engage the pressing issues of this current moment, their impact on our fields of study, and the groundbreaking research, teaching and public engagement taking place across the country. This is our opportunity, as thinkers of religion and American culture, to assess and respond to this current moment and create a culture of sustained conversation on “Religion &” its impact on our changing world.

Below you will find all the teaching resources created for and from the Religion & episodes. Our staff compiles notes, resources from the panelists, and more to create resources for learning and teaching these important topics.
